Judaism And Hunting: "Downright Cruelty"

By Rabbi Dr. H. Rabinowitz, of London, England, writing in the Hebrew Medical Journal

Regarding the public controversy on hunting, abolitionists assert that it is a barbarous relic of bygone ages, a wanton, detestable and demoralizing cruelty, "the most callous gala of brutality that has ever masqueraded in the name of sport." Protagonists, on the other hand, consider that it is the most practical way of keeping the spread of pests (such as foxes) within reasonable limits. They also point to the exhilaration of riding a good horse in the countryside, the adventure, excitement, and hazards of the chase.

What is the attitude of Judaism? In semi-civilized society, hunting was not merely a "cruel sport" but a matter of vital necessity. It was a means of exterminating dangerous beasts and a source of procuring sustenance. Palestine, despite its considerable density of population, was not denuded of game.

We read of the prevalence of lions, bears, jackals, foxes, harts, roebucks and the fallow deer. Frequent mention is made of the diverse weapons such as pitfall, net, slings, snares as well as bows and arrows. Nimrod is described as a "mighty hunter before the Lord." Ishmael was an Archer and Esau is pictured as "a cunning hunter, a man of the field," and is sharply contrasted with Jacob "a quiet man dwelling in tents."

Legend even associates hunting with one of the antediluvian tragedies that led to the death of Cain. Lamech was blind and when he went hunting he was accompanied by his young son who acted as his guide. In one of the excursions, the son discerned a horned creature in the distance. He took it for a beast and promptly told his father to release the arrow. When they came close to the victim they discovered that it was the body of Cain. In despair, the blind Lamech clapped his hands together and inadvertently killed his son.

The Patriarchs were herdsmen rather than hunters. Hence references to hunting are rare and casual. No actual hunt is even mentioned. The celebrated feats of Samson, David, and Benaiah were acts of self-defense. How different was the attitude of Israel's neighbors.

The Assyrians, Chaldeans and others were renowned hunters. In ancient Egypt hunters even formed a social class. In Greece, hunting was regarded as valuable training for military life. According to Herodotus, Cyrus, the king of Persia, kept so large a hunting establishment that it took the revenue of four great cities to pay for it. Many of the paintings and sculptures of ancient times depict scenes of the chase.

Jewish writings, however, record no such exploits, except in the case of bloodthirsty Herod. Josephus describes him as a "most excellent hunter, in which sport he generally had great success owing to his skill in riding, for in one day he once killed forty wild beasts." He also kept a regular stud and a huntman.

Biblical commandments concerning animals are detailed and humane. An ox must not be muzzled while treading the corn. The mother and young are not to be slaughtered on the same day. Even the ass of an enemy must be released when it is lying helpless on its back. Domestic animals and beasts of burden are to rest on the Sabbath.

Rabbinic sources mirror the Biblical ideals that God's mercies are "over all his work" and that "the righteous man regards the life of his beasts." "Tsa'ar Ba'ale Chayim" is classed by the rabbis as a Biblical injunction. Moses and David were appointed leaders of Israel because as shepherds they had shown themselves to be kind and considerate.

Rabbi Judah Hanassi attributed his lengthy illness to an act of cruelty towards an animal. A young calf on being led to slaughter hid its face in his skirts. But he brusquely said to it: "Go, for this purpose wast thou created." This act was out of line with the generally accepted high standard: "We must not begin our meal before having given food to our cattle."

Nor was it permitted to put on the animal a burden heavier than it could bear. Many of the motives underlying the Shechitah (ritual slaughtering) laws may also be due to the desire to prevent unnecessary pain to the animal.

Abhorring cruelty in any form, the rabbis were naturally not in favor of hunting. Expounding a verse from Psalms, "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of the sinner," Rabbi Simon ben Pazzi interpreted its latter part to mean "the one who does not attend contests of wild beasts." Elsewhere, another rabbi asks incredulously, "Was Moses a hunter or an archer?" The stringent laws of Kashrut, moreover, discouraged Jews from indulging in the sport as the carcass was classified as "Nevela" (that which dies of itself), and was unfit to be eaten.

The late Joseph Jacobs unearthed in the Forest Roll of the County of Essex a unique incident which occurred in Colchester in 1277. "A certain doe was startled in Wildehaye Wood by the dogs of Sir John de Burgh, and in her flight came by the top of the city of Colchester. And there issued forth Saunte, son of Ursel, Jew of Colchester, son of Aaron, and Samuel, son of the same, Isaac the Jewish chaplain, Copin and Elias. Jews; and certain Christians of the said city. And these with a mighty clamour chased the same doe through the south gate into the aforesaid city, and they worried her by their shouting that they forced her to jump over a wall, and she thus broke her neck. And there came upon them Walter the bailiff and Robert the Toller, both of the same city, and carried thence the game and had their will of it."

Rabbi Meir b. Baruch of Rothenburg (1215-1293) is unequivocal in his condemnation. "He who hunts game with dogs, as gentiles do, will not enjoy the life to come." Rabbi Jacob Weil even advocated the omission of the blessing of Sheheyanu ("Who has kept us alive and has preserved us"), a benediction recited when a new garment is put on for the first time, in the case of a fur coat.

Rabbi Isaac ben Samuel Lampronti (1679-1756), in his well-known encyclopaedia Pachad Yitzchak, devoted considerable space to hunting and related problems. After marshalling the well-known authorities he condemns "men who merely do it (i.e. hunt) for sport and recreation. What benefit do they derive from killing beasts and birds without a cause and they surely transgress the prohibition for wanton destruction of anything useful to man. If one in a sporting gesture were to direct his arrow against his neighbor and thereby wounding him mortally that he die, would he not be punished. Why then is the position different with regards to animals. The Scripture says 'His mercies are upon all creatures.' . . . The gentiles furthermore are in the habit of chasing animals with weapons and we are enjoined not to emulate their example."

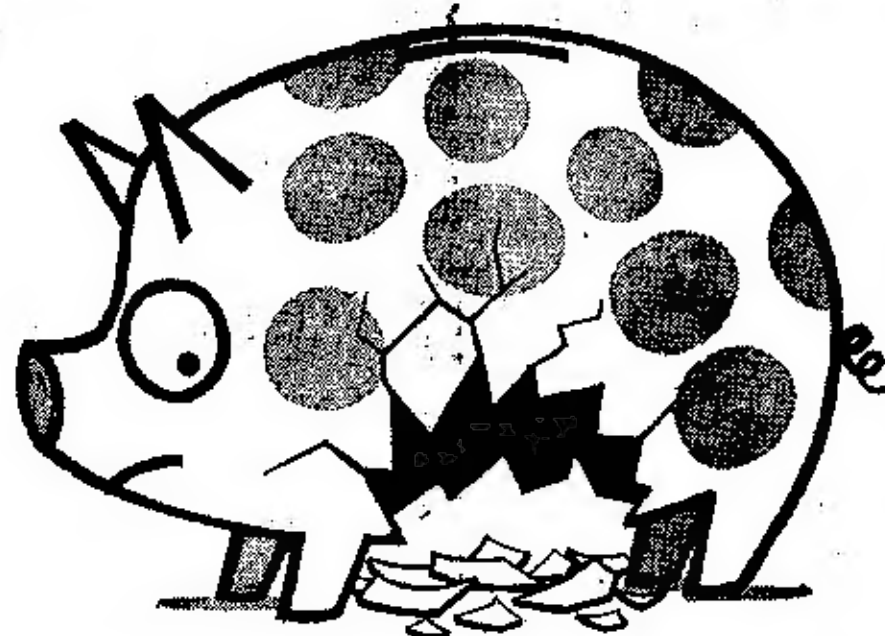

Equally emphatic was the view of Rabbi Ezekiel ben Judah Landau (1718-1793), "the Noda bi Yehudah." He was asked: I have been favored by God with a large estate consisting of villages and forests, the latter abounding with wild animals. Is it permitted to hunt these animals as mere pastime? Will such an act constitute a violation of the laws concerning cruelty to animals? He replied: "I cannot comprehend how a Jew could even dream of killing animals merely for pleasure of hunting, when he has no immediate need for the bodies of the creatures. . . . It is certainly no meritorious act to pursue them in their own haunts. It is rather a lustful occupation. There is a distinction made for one who derives his livelihood from hunting by selling the furs or skins. The animal world is subordinated to man to provide for his needs. It makes no difference if we take the life of clean animals for food, or kill unclean animals for their skin and furs. But when the act is not prompted by such a motive, it is downright cruelty."

The views of these great eighteenth century rabbinical authorities faithfully reflect the attitude of Judaism to the chase.

 A LOEW'S HOTEL • PRESTON B. TISCH, PRESIDENT

Zalman Shazar, President of Israel, who was among the Israeli notables who took part in the ceremonies on the site of the new building, at the end of Herzog Street (a continuation of Gaza Road), opposite Givat Mordechai, was the first to sign the Y's foundation scroll. Deputy Prime Minister Abba Eban paid tribute to the leaders of the Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. and Jewish Community Center movement in the United States for having raised most of the funds for completion of the Y building's first unit.

Other speakers were: Solomon Litt, president, World Federation of YMHAs and Jewish Community Centers, which is raising the funds for the building; Mrs. Florence G. Heller, president of the National Jewish Welfare Board, American member of the Federation; Mordecai Ish-Shalom, Mayor of Jerusalem; Shlomo Aza, chairman of the Y Building Committee; and James MacFarland, press attache of the U.S. Embassy.

Taking part in the actual ground-breaking were: Charles Aaron, of Chicago, and Irving Edison, of St. Louis, honorary presidents of JWB and former presidents of the Federation; Mr. Araxi; Israel Cardonsky, of Elizabeth, N.J.; Eli A. Cohen, of Swampscott, Mass.; Harold H. Levin, of New York, Federation treasurer; Jack Strong, of Los Angeles; Ted Lurie, former Y president; Joseph S. Gershman, of New York; Dr. Alexander Friedman, architect of the building; Dr. Joseph Soriano, Aaron Valero, Dr. A. A. Weinberg, and Moshe Zohar.

The Jerusalem Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. will be a two-story building located near the Katamon Quarters. The three-acre plot was made available by the Jerusalem municipality. For the past fourteen years the Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. has been conducting its program from rented quarters on Hillol Street.

The first unit of the Jerusalem Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. will have approximately 30,000 square feet in a building costing $600,000, and will contain a youth lounge, assembly hall, library, music room, snack bar, carpentry workshop, photography laboratory, arts and crafts shop, club rooms, a swimming pool opening to an outdoor patio, and a gymnasium. The plans also call for outdoor tennis and basketball courts and a playground.

Architect of the Jerusalem Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. is Dr. Alexander Friedman, of Jerusalem. The plans were reviewed on the spot by Leon Spector, JWB's Jewish Community Center building consultant; and by the Jerusalem Y Building Committee of which the chairman is Saul Hofowitz. Funds for the building are being raised with Mrs. Hugo Dalsheimer, of Baltimore, as chairman.

The ground-breaking was the highlight of a three-day Conference on Y.M. and Y.W.H.A. and Jewish Community Center Work sponsored by the Federation in cooperation with the Paul Baerwald School of Social Work at the Hebrew University.

Among the speakers were: Dr. Israel Katz, director of the Paul Baerwald School; Dr. Jacob Katz, professor of Jewish social and educational history at Hebrew University; Sanford Solender, executive vice-president of J.W.B.; Mrs. Hava Magnes, acting president of the Jerusalem Y; Theo Klein, vice-chairman of the Commission on Centers and Camps of the Standing Conference of European Jewish Community Services; David Mucarov, of Paul Baerwald School; Eliezer Cohen, executive director of the Jerusalem Y; Norman Schiff, former president of the Newark Y.M.-Y.W.H.A.; Miss Deborah Miller, consultant on Centers and Camps to JDC; Miss Regina Boritzer, director, community organization division, Israel Ministry of Social Welfare; Bertram H. Gold, executive director, Jewish Centers Association, Los Angeles; and Rabbi Philip Goodman, executive secretary of the World Federation; Mrs. Florence Mitwoch, Paul Baerwald School; Mrs. Abraham Harman, chairman of the board of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund; and Mr. Litt.

TEXT OF CUSHING'S ADDRESS

Following, in unofficial translation from the Latin, is the text of a speech by Richard James Cardinal Cushing, Archbishop of Boston, to the Ecumenical Council in St. Peter's Basilica, from the New York Times:

The declaration on the Jews and non-Christians is acceptable in general. Through this Ecumenical Council the Church must manifest to the whole world, and to all men, a concern which is genuine, an esteem all embracing, a sincere charity — in a word, it must show forth Christ. And in this schema, "De Ecumenismo," with its declarations on religious liberty and on the Jews and non-Christians, in a certain sense it does just that. I would propose, however, three amendments specifically on the Jews.

First: We must make our statement about the Jews more positive, less timid. More charitable. Our text well illustrates the priceless patrimony which the new Israel has received from the law and the prophets.

And it well illustrates what the Jews and Christians share in common. But surely we ought to indicate the fact that we sons of Abraham according to the spirit must show a special esteem and particular love for the sons of Abraham according to the flesh because of this common patrimony. As sons of Adam, they are our brothers: As sons of Abraham, they are the blood brothers of Christ.

The fourth paragraph of this declaration should manifest this and our obligation of special esteem, as a conclusion which logically flows from the first section.

Secondly: On the culpability of the Jews for the death of our Saviour. As we read in sacred scriptures, the rejection of the Messiah by his own people is a mystery: a mystery which is indeed for our instruction, not for exaltation.

The parables and prophecies of our Lord teach us this. We cannot judge the leaders of ancient Israel — God alone is their judge. And most certainly we cannot dare attribute to later generations of Jews the guilt of the crucifixion of the Lord Jesus or the death of the Saviour of the world, except in the sense of the universal guilt in which all of us men share.

We know and we believe that Christ died freely, and he died for all men and because of the sins of all men, Jews and gentiles.

Therefore, in this declaration in clear and evident words we must deny that the Jews are guilty of the death of our Saviour except insofar as all men have sinned and on that account crucified him and, indeed, still crucify him. And especially, we must condemn any who would attempt to justify inequities, hatred or even persecution of the Jews as Christian actions.

All of us have seen the evil fruit of this kind of false reasoning. In this August assembly, in this solemn moment, we must cry out: There is no Christian rationale — neither theological nor historical — for any inequity, hatred or persecution of our Jewish brothers.

Great is the hope, both among Catholics and among our separated Christian brothers, as well as among our Jewish friends in the New World, that this sacred synod will make such a fitting declaration.

Thirdly and finally! I ask, venerable brothers, whether we ought not to confess humbly before the world that Christians too frequently have not shown themselves as true Christians, as faithful to Christ, in their relations with their Jewish brothers? In this our age, how many have suffered! How many have died because of the indifference of Christians, because of silence! There is no need to enumerate the crimes committed in our own time. If not many Christian voices were lifted in recent years against the great injustices, yet let our voices humbly cry out now.

political parties in West Germany. Legal experts are also studying the question of whether the statute does in fact expire in May, in view of the fact that West Germany did not become a fully sovereign nation until 1955.

At Bogota, Colombia, Vice Premier Abba Eban, of Israel, said that a recent tour of Latin America by three Arab Cabinet ministers had failed to attract support for the Arab side of the quarrel with Israel.

Mr. Eban added a sixteen-day tour of Mexico, Venezuela, and Colombia and left for New York. He had been sent by his Government on a friendship mission and to counteract any effects of the Arab's visit.

The three Arab ministers — from Jordan, Syria, and Lebanon — toured Latin America to win support for the Arab stand against Israel's program to harness the waters of the Jordan River. They also sought support, says the New York Times, for the traditional Arab position of hostility toward Israel.

Eddie Cantor Shared His Success

The Montreal Gazette says: Eddie Cantor is one of the notables whose name is in Montreal's Golden Book at City Hall. He was several times in this city. Montrealers saw him bouncing about the Forum like a juvenile, even though he admitted to forty years on the stage.

He began as a poor orphan who never knew either of his parents and was brought up by his grandmother. He first learned how to act by doing impersonations of famous stage stars for pennies on the sidewalks of New York. But while his success was all the greater in contrast to his early hardships, it was all the greater in another way, for he never forgot the hardships of others.

His philanthropies were many, generous and unceasing. He established his Surprise Lake Camp for underprivileged boys, on the same lake where he had enjoyed outings when a boy. He took a close interest in polio victims, originated the name "March of Dimes," and headed the movement for several years. As Mayor of Broadway he used an office, originated in fun, to accomplish worthy and charitable ends.

He was a great friend to Israel, especially in selling Israel's bonds. And in 1949 he performed in Montreal to an audience of 8,000 to raise funds for the Montreal Coordinating Council of Bnai Brith. Those in hospitals never had a better friend. He established the Purple Heart circuit to bring entertainment to men and women in government hospitals. And he had been one of the first entertainers to visit Walter Reed Hospital in Washington, in 1919.

It is very easy for those who achieve spectacular success not only to want to forget their own hard beginnings but to forget the troubles of others. Eddie Cantor never forgot either. By sharing his success throughout his life, he achieved something that success itself could never have given him: the gratitude of thousands — which was better even than acclaim.

Why Some Jewish Immigrants Prefer To Settle In Canada Is Their Own Business

A column in the Yiddish Daily of New York, "The Day", by Dr. S. Margoshes, with reference to the recent submission made by the Canadian Jewish Congress and the Jewish Immigrant Aid Services to the Canadian Government on behalf of 270 Jewish families in North Africa desiring to come to Canada, says:

"There is good reason to assume that the immigration applications submitted by the Canadian Jewish Congress and the Jewish Immigrant Aid Society will be approved. Both organizations have a considerable influence with the Government, which is convinced both of their loyalty to Canada and their devotion to the Jewish people.

"Why those Jews prefer to go to Canada rather than to Israel, is strictly a business of their own. Presumably, they are of the opinion that they could do better for themselves in Canada than in the State of Israel. As to the Jewish State, it has kept its doors open to those Jews, just as it has kept its doors open for other Jewish immigrants from other lands. It has never tried to compel anybody to come to Israel.

"It is this conviction that Jewish refugees in search of a home, have a perfect right to decide where they wish to go for their permanent domicile, that has animated the Canadian Jewish Congress and the Jewish Immigrant Aid Society in their endeavor to assist the North African Jews to find a haven in Canada. After all is said and done, Israel is no penal colony to which people are dispatched against their will. If some North African Jews wish to come to Canada rather than to Israel, that's their choice and it should be respected. As far as the Canadian Jewish organizations are concerned, this choice amounts to a request for assistance that must be headed.

"Incidentally, this action on the part of the Canadian Jewish Congress and the Jewish Immigrant Aid Society will serve, we hope, as the best retort to those detractors of Zionism and of the Jewish State who continue to charge that all Jewish instrumentalities the world over are being used for the purpose of dumping Jews in Israel, regardless of the wishes of the immigrants themselves. It has long ago been explained that Israel is here to serve as a home for those who must go there and also for those who wish to go there, and that excludes such Jews as those North African Refugees whose preference is Canada."

Urges N.Y. Religious Faiths To Wipe Out Negro Slums

John D. Rockefeller 3rd, addressing the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, of New York, called upon the city's major religious faiths to bury their prejudices and undertake a vast community effort to wipe out Negro slum conditions in New York.

"This problem needs and deserves a community solution," he said at a dinner at the Plaza to inaugurate the Federation's 48th annual campaign for $22.5 million, reports the New York Herald Tribune. The answer, he said, should be "an inter-faith solution, a conscientious and concerted effort by our community organizations, irrespective of religion."

Rapping the philosophy of let-each-take-care-of-its-own, Mr. Rockefeller declared: "The problem of the Negro community today is a community problem, and what his religion happens to be is entirely secondary."

It is "unfortunate," Mr. Rockefeller observed, that the field of philanthropy "should be hampered by traditional prejudices and religious differences."
